November 12, 2012, 7:31 am -- /EPR NETWORK/ -- Our congratulations are in order to the re-election of President Barack Obama and the people of the United States of America. This exemplified true democracy of a united people. If only other countries would emulate the same example, then the world would be a better place to live in. Looking at the large size of electorate, Kenya has only a fraction of what the United States have. With the Kenyan elections looming in March 2013, the political temperatures have started heating up, and the Kenyan mwananchi (citizen) eagerly awaits to elect their new president, who will lead for the next 5 years.

The news of the re-election of the President Barack Obama was not only celebrated in the USA but all over the world. The ancestral home associated with President Barack Obama was not left behind, and Kogelo village in Kenya was in jubilation, with festivity going on throughout the day and night after the President's acceptance speech. Media reports indicate since the village was mentioned in relation to name President Barack Obama, the village was turned from a non-activity to one whose economy has certainly improved. The place is now a haven of economic activity with many infrastructure improvements.

The Kenyan people applaud the current President Emilio Mwai Kibaki for his efforts in developing the country's economic through infrastructure, energy, human resource , health and other sectors. Kenya now seeks and searches for their suitable presidential candidate to lead them for the next 5 years after the current president retires. One wonders if Barack Obama would have been elected Kenyan president if he had vied and was eligible.

The people of United States have spoken, they have made their choice. Kenya now awaits the American citizens to make plans to travel and enjoy their holidays with bliss and peace. The Kenyan people await you to see their beautiful country and visit the beaches, mountains, parks, deserts, lakes, forests, archeology sites, museums, cultural places and so on. Ending your year in style and enjoying your Christmas holidays in a different location in style is always a good thing to do, and Kenya will be your best bet. Whether you are planning your holiday with family, or with friends, or even singly, make the memories and live with them forever. DO NOT be alone, its good to address 10 tips not to be alone.

For a while now, all eyes were in USA , and they have done well. Now we urge all American holidaymakers to continue with the trend of holidaying in Kenya as the next preferred destination.
