Powerful New Book Reveals Secrets of Death Care & How a Funeral Director Recovered From Death in the Embalming Room.

Amsterdam, Holland 11 Jan 2010—as an embalmer and funeral director Jordan Sage was among the walking dead. Divorced after 12-years, Jordan met Cyndie James, a professional actress and casting agent in LA. As Jordan's death care business started to flourish and the two lovers enjoyed intense passion, Cyndie James told Jordan that she was still married, and that she was divorced once before with two older children and that she had two additional younger children with her second husband. Cyndie James told this to Jordan seven months after they met.

Surrounded by devastating loss daily and after finding what he believed to be true love, undaunted, Jordan stayed with Cyndie James for more than three years while waiting for her divorce that she never filed. Approaching the age of 50 Jordan realized that he was dying as life passed him by. Approaching his emotional breaking point Jordan boarded a plane bound for China to escape depression, pain, guilt, and the deep regret of his participation in an extramarital affair that nearly killed him.

Pushing 50 in the Death Car, Emotionally Bleeding Life's Blood is a brutally honest look behind the scenes of funeral home embalming rooms, extramarital affairs, the death care profession as a whole, and what it takes to survive emotionally after hitting rock bottom. After converting to Judaism, getting married to a Chinese national, and having a mixed blood baby, Jordan started to feel better. This book is an invaluable portrait of love, marriage, and family values. Jordan's book is a call for self realization, and self motivation while revealing some life lessons that can help anyone to live life to their fullest.
