Hotels.com and Expedia have announced the opening of their new Ireland office which is located in Dublin. This latest opening will mean that the Irish hotel supply relationships for both brands, Hotels.com and its parent company Expedia Inc - the world's leading online travel company, will now both be run from this new office.

The new move is part of Hotels.com's continued commitment to the Irish market to provide locally based ground support for its Irish partners across the travel and hospitality sector. The Dublin office will be home to the new Irish market management team who will now be based in the Irish capital for the first time.

Senior Market Manager, Orla Lee, will oversee operations throughout the country but will also maintain a specific focus on Dublin, Galway and Belfast. Orla will be supported by Market Manager Veronika Beckers, who will take on responsibility for regional Ireland, and Revenue Specialist, Elizabeth O'Connor.

Seamus MacCormaic, Director of Market Management for UK and Ireland, Hotels.com and Expedia, commented: "Ireland is incredibly important to Hotels.com and Expedia both as a destination and a market. We are pleased to be in a position to open this office, giving locally based support to our hotel partners throughout the country and continuing to build Ireland as a destination for our customers across the globe."

Hotels.com currently has more than 70 sites across the world offering an unbeatable choice of more than 110,000 quality hotels, B&Bs and serviced apartments in hundreds of destinations.
