18 May 2010 – As more and more mobile phone users look to upgrade their handsets for smarter models on a regular basis, dedicated recycling website Recycle.co.uk is helping people to exchange their unwanted handsets for money. The site allows consumers to compare exchange prices for phones online before swapping them for money.

The website operates as a forum which allows people to advertise unwanted items for free, so owners of unwanted mobile phones can use the free recycle comparison scheme to swap their old handsets for money rather than leaving them sat in a drawer or a cupboard.

The leading phone recycling programs lets owners of all kinds of phones swap them for money, including top brands like Nokia, Apple iPhone, Sony Ericsson, Samsung, Blackberry, Motorola and Siemens. Among the companies which offer money for old handsets on the website are Argos and Boots, who even offer owners more than the phone is worth in vouchers for their stores.

Gareth Robinson, spokesperson for Recycle.co.uk, comments, "At Recycle.co.uk we love helping people put unwanted consumer items to good use, whether that means making money from them or not. Our scheme which lets people recycle mobile phones for cash is proving hugely popular with users."
