City centre theatre will present a showcase of the best international animation efforts from the past year, with website LondonTown.com offering discounted hotels in London close by.

October 18, 2012, 6:36 am -- /EPR NETWORK/ -- This autumn, the Barbican Theatre presents the London International Animation Festival, which aims to bring together the very best in creative animation from the past 12 months. The LIAF – which runs from October 25 th until November 4th – will feature gala premieres, Q & A sessions with top directors, animators and voice artists, and workshops chaired by the very best in the business.

Every animation technique will be covered over the course of the ten-day programme. Among the highlights of the festival will be a special appearance from influential British artist Ralph Steadman, who debuts his new film 'For No Good Reason'. LIAF centres around the Barbican Screen theatre, one of the city centre's most iconic venues.

Ticket prices for the huge range of events will be between £11.50 and £12.50, and are available via LondonTown.com. The website has also announced details of special discounts on hotels in London, so festival-goers looking for a cheap room near the Barbican are advised to visit their site.
