LondonOffices.com, a leading online resource for serviced offices in London, offers premier office space in the city's iconic buildings and many others which can be just as beneficial.

London is home to some of the most important and prestigious business addresses in the world, but companies don't have to choose the properties on the postcards to make the right move for their company.

The extensive range of serviced offices in London is diverse, with something for businesses of every size, in every commercial sector.

One of the keys to finding the right serviced office space in London for any business is choosing the right part of the city for your industry. The capital is home to thriving hubs of finance, media, information technology and much more. The most important part on a new office search is choosing serviced offices in the area of the city which suits the company best.

The vast majority of serviced offices in London will offer the facilities required to meet the day to day need of a business, but they won't all be in the perfect part of the city. Why is this important? Because the close proximity of their peers, networking opportunities and the major players in their industry are advantages not to be missed.

With a little research into the various exciting business hubs that are active within the capital, it's possible to choose a commercial location at the heart of an industry hotspot. The perfect office building might not be found on a postcode or the cover of a glossy magazine, but it can play a pivotal role in allowing the organisation to thrive and compete.

The City of London is one of the financial capitals of the world, so for hedge funds, investment firms and commodity traders, it pays to set up shop in The City. Many major banking and financial institutions have headquarters here, and they rub shoulders with the offices of 500 banks. The LondonOffices.com online portfolio features a variety of premium serviced offices in the city. These bespoke commercial locations have been carefully selected for the quality of their facilities and the strategic benefits of their locations and nearby transport links.

For IT start-ups the steely skyscrapers of The City have nothing on the off-beat office environments of East End London. Internet and technology giants like Google and Apple have taken residence in the East End. Intel, Facebook and Cisco are also neighbours, as East London Tech City continues to be seen as the UK's Silicon Valley. You won't find many of these quirky commercial spaces on the postcards either, but they could be the difference between the success and failure of a web-based venture.

At the LondonOffices.com site a selection of handpicked serviced offices are waiting to be explored; by area, by postcode or by interactive street map. It couldn't be simpler to browse the LondonOffices.com portfolio and find excellent commercial properties for any organisation.
