May 15, 2013, 4:16 am -- /EPR NETWORK/ -- As part of their 2013 tour, Muse are set to take the stage at London's Emirates Stadium for two nights this May. The musical heavyweights are renowned for their ambitious hybrids of rock, opera, classical and electronica, and now they're set to bring this to the stage with what's likely to be another epic tour. For anyone travelling from outside of London, a number of cheap hotels in London all in close proximity to the Emirates Stadium can be booked on LondonTown.com.

Released in 2012, the band's single 'Survival', the first to be released from their sixth studio album 'The 2nd Law', became the official song for the London 2012 Olympic Games, and its dramatic and cinematic lyrics blasted out of speakers across London to gee on the athletes. However, with its humour and over-the-top madness, the single received mixed reviews. The album followed and offered a madcap fusion of progressive rock, strings, pop melodies and dubstep. Performing tracks from this album as well as their earlier hits, these live shows are likely to deliver the band's trademark extravagant displays.

The Muse gigs, which take place on 25th and 26th May 2013, will be followed a week later by Green Day, who are also performing at the stadium and will be supported by All Time Low and the Kaiser Chiefs.
