After the Samsung's release of Galaxy Note 3 phablet device, Hong Kong company Big Fun Market has announced plan to produce its unique wireless charging accessory for this latest device today. Big Fun Market's wireless charging thin receiver is Powermat (PMA standard) compatible, allowing users to simply place their enabled device on to any Powermat surface to begin charging wirelessly.

Leveraging on its success for the previously launched PMA Standard Powermat Compatible Wireless Charging Thin Receivers for Samsung Galaxy S3, S4 and Note II, the planned PMA Standard Powermat Compatible Wireless Charging Thin Receivers for Samsung Note III will allow the users to keep using their own phone cases, without any bulky charging cases that other companies produce. The latest internal test shows the wireless charging for the phone with this thin receiver can be activated even on a stack of 21 sheets of (80g/square m) photo-copy paper.

Powermat surfaces can be used at home, and are available at select public locations including McDonald's and Starbucks locations across North America and Europe, with more locations rolling out in 2014. One of the largest automakers in the world, GM will also be rolling out Powermat wireless charging surfaces for its vehicles starting in 2014.

Big Fun Market's thin receivers for GS3, GS4, Note2 are currently available from Amazon.com and at www.bigfunmarket.com as well as dealers in China, Hong Kong, Australia, Malaysia, the Philippines.

Big Fun Market also whole-sell to dealers for any of these innovative products.

Big Fun Market is a Hong Kong-based company founded in 2011 specialising in selling consumer electronics and accessories.
