Press Release Body = Dr. Neil A. Frankel announced a new website that provides information, images and links to sources on the Atlantic slave trade and slavery in America.

The website is non-commercial and has been designed to meet the needs of students, teachers, scholars, and individuals with an interest in the subject. It contains information, images, maps, facts and figures, and a discussion of African-American Genealogy. Also included are historical facts that are 'hard to believe - but true,' which adds interest to the subject.

The resource section of the website provides one of the most comprehensive lists of links and other sources to be found anywhere.

"I am very excited to launch this new non-commercial website on slavery and the slave trade," said Dr. Frankel. "I have tried to provide the most useful and well written information combined with a very comprehensive list of links and sources for those who desire more information on any aspect of the subject. Every image and map on the site has an explanation and a historical context. I have included the most up to date information on African-American Genealogy, a rapidly developing field, as well as an unbiased account of the role of organized religion. Slavery is a fascinating subject, and my intent in designing this site was to convey that to the reader."
