Not only wedding couples, but major celebrities and notables such as Dwight Gooden former baseball hall of famer, iconic anchorman Roger Mudd, Former Lt. Governor MD Michael Steele, Congressman Eli Cummings, Hollywood producer Cleveland O'Neil have all found their way in front the lens of a MorningStar photographer.

While serving every possible client MorningStar has broken away from the herd and focused primarily on the ethnic client. "There is an assumption out there that black, Indian and Asian women don't get married as frequently as everyone else, it may be statistically true but it is not borne out by the people who come to us"

Gone are the days of the couple looking longingly into each other's eyes, photographs as done by MorningStar Photography focuses on the nuances of the day, mother's who cry, bridesmaids who aren't always happy at the altar, an engagement ring on the heel of a bride's shoe, a bride's expression as her sorority sisters wish her the best for her future.

This niche market has allowed MorningStar to blaze a trail in the past ten years producing eye popping images for the client. This is high end boutique photography available for the senator's daughter as well as the sanitation worker's daughter they have something for almost every budget.

Another benefit for those who care about diversity the owners of this company represent the America that Barack Obama would be most proud of, Alan Rein a Jewish man and co owner, his wife Carla Trinidad born, is the driving force behind the day to day operations of this of this small, hands on thriving enterprise. Carla said "Though it's often tough to believe given the culture we live in, we actually care about what we produce here for our clients", we don't do fast food photography, it takes time and patience to create beautiful images" "It's the eye behind the lens that matters most, not a photographer's ability to Photoshop."
