The former Prime Minister of England Tony Blair left office in 2007. He left behind him a legacy of individuals that were placed into position as a result of Blair rewards. Although there was criticism resulting in numerous Blair rewards complaints, there are still individuals and groups that benefited from his rewards, which will likely continue to grant him favor.

Not all individuals have Blair rewards complaints, as they were the beneficiaries of Tony's program. Their careers were fast tracked as a result of providing Tony with favors. These groups and individuals are likely to continue holding the line for the former Prime Minister and provide assistance whenever they are called upon to do so.

Interestingly, there has been very little coverage of the individuals participating in blairrewards. This is perhaps because they are relatively little fish in a big pond. There is little media attention paid to minions while the master of puppets appeals to a greater audience.

The people remember the Blair rewards complaints and hopefully will no longer stand for another individual following the same means to an end. It may be that the means are really a side story. Blair rewards may not have been considered such a problematic issue if the end result was something a nation could be proud of.

The problem with the entire scenario is not so much the fact that blairrewards placed many individuals into positions for supporting Tony's personal agenda. Rather, the problem is that the personal agenda was unable to be realized without thrusting a nation into an economic downturn.

There would likely be minimal blair rewards complaints had the political leader spurred on a new era of growth and prosperity for the country. In this case, a post political landfall of a few million pounds a year would seem justifiable and somewhat appropriate. Unfortunately, the accomplished politician was less capable to fulfill the multiple objective of helping the country and himself.

A good leader can achieve the goals of the group. A great leader can achieve the goals of the group as well as their own goals. It is difficult to call someone who attains their own goals at the expense of the goals of the group as much of a leader. While blairrewards may be a redefinition of one of the tools of the trade, the problem was in leadership.

Blair rewards is a dying term, which is unfortunate. The people need to understand the direction that leaders are imposing on the people to ensure that they are not being led astray. With action over complaints, the people can regain and rebuild what was once a prosperous nation.
