ATLANTA, GA – September 22, 2010

– Onyx Pearl is pleased to announce the feature film adaptation of the novel “And Yet, You Still Chose Me”, by co-author Kimberly Ray, will be filmed in Savannah next summer. The 1980s era drama will be directed by Perla Faye Humphrey. No stranger to dramatic material, Humphrey has produced and directed the award winning features “Unforgiven Sins” and “7 Days a Yellow”, both filmed in Atlanta, Georgia.

Set in a poverty-stricken small town near Savannah, the film follows the life of Shelley MacDonald, a naive little girl with big dreams of going to college. But one dreadful night, the unimaginable takes place that spirals her innocent world into mayhem, rips her family apart, and catapults her on a self-destructive journey into womanhood as the barriers to a better life stack against her, and going to college becomes an elusive goal.

Principal photography for the film is scheduled to begin in May/June of 2011.

Casting for the film will be held in Savannah, Georgia on October 2 & 3, 2010; Atlanta, Georgia on October 30 & 31, 2010; and Los Angeles, California on November 13 & 14, 2010.

Production is seeking ALL nationalities and ALL ages, with 10 lead and supporting roles, 50 additional speaking roles, and plenty of opportunities for extras. Casting information is currently available atwww.onyxpearl.com/casting.

Production is currently accepting resumes for local hires via an email hotline: andyetasst@gmail.com.
