Santa revealed a long kept secret during a recent interview about the handling of Christmas letters from Santa for 2010. Many of the letters that are received at the North Pole are organized and maintained by mice. Elves have been given credit for helping Santa in every aspect of Christmas preparation. Some people may be shocked to learn that it is Christmas Mice that help with the Santa letters. In further discussion Santa disclosed that Marty the Mouse is his top choice for Santa letter helper in 2010.

In an interview with the North Pole Gazette, Santa disclosed that letters to Santa start to pour into the North Pole in September each and every year and the letters from Santa have to roll right back out as fast as they come in. Santa said he knew there was no way he could answer and mail out all the letters required. He used to worry because he didn't want even one of those special letters to Santa to go overlooked. Santa Claus said that each letter he received was special and each one deserved a response. According to him, writing and sending personalized letters from Santa are a huge part of his job.

But before Santa can respond to the letters he has to organize them. His elves are too busy making toys and baking treats to help out with the Christmas letters. Santa had to find someone to help with this important task.

Santa looked to the many animals that lived around the North Pole. Sometimes the birds and fish would help with the delivery of Santa letters to the hard to reach places. The problem was these animals prefer to be outdoors and the letters were inside, where they could stay nice and dry. Suddenly Santa realized that he had hundreds if not thousands of animals who could help him organize all his Christmas letters. Of course, all the mice that lived at the North Pole with him and Mrs. Claus would be perfect. The mice liked to be inside where they stayed warm and cozy. Their size had always kept the mice from being able to help out with much of Santa's work. This job however was perfect for even the smallest mouse.

Right away Santa taught his mice a way to organize the mail that made the whole process work better. Mrs. Claus placed beautiful labels on baskets for each country and every type of animal. For example, a Santa letter from a fox would go in the fox basket and a letter from a penguin would go in the penguin baskets and so on.

The mice were quick learners; soon all of Santa's mail was organized. Mrs. Claus was happy that the enormous pile of letters next to the front door was replaced with pretty Christmas baskets. And it is much easier to keep track of the mail with help from the mice. Each year Santa selects a smart mouse to lead the others in keeping things on schedule. This year Santa's choice is Marty the Mouse. Marty is very smart and he is always trying to come up with new ways to make things even better. He knows how important the Santa letters are.

With the help of Marty and the other mice Santa can ensure that each and every child who sends a letter to him will in return receive personalized letters from Santa. It had always worried Santa that a child somewhere would end up disappointed because he had missed their letters. The mice have eased Santa's mind on the matter of letters from Santa.

Stay posted as news develops on this exciting story and take a look at his letters from Santa videos. Santa himself calls his helpers "Santa's Christmas Mice" and declared from here on out the mice would always be his official mail helpers.
