Lastsecondeals.com is a discount travel website with a modern design and a different outlook as to their Business goals and mission statement. The website was officially launched in early 2010 although had been on the internet since April 2009. David Lynch the owner of lastsecondeals.com said I took my time with designing the website as I wanted a more modern feel about the site and have an open plan design than the conventional sites of today. I hope that people will warm to the new era in website design and I guess time will tell.

Next David worked feverishly searching the internet to source the best travel companies online to be in partnership with and strike up a mutual agreement in securing unique prices and special deals for his website customers through their special travel portals links. These travel portal links were especially designed and created solely for Lastsecondeals and their customers by their partner websites and David couldn't be happier with the pricing and services they provide.

This has a win win situation for both David's customers and himself as he is able to secure cheap flight tickets up to 75% off and hotel deals whereby his customers can save up to 50% or even 60% on room rates at top hotels around the world. These discounts would also include car rentals and on cruises worldwide.

The companies' number one goal has been to give the customers the chance to have that dream destination holiday of their choice that may have been out of reach in the past due to circumstances, whether it was finances or a low income etc which prevented them from fulfilling their dream vacation. Hopefully this site will make it possible for them to afford that dream break now and have that holiday they so deserve.

The win win take David was talking about was that his site lastsecondeals.com donates 25% of its takings each month to the American Cancer Research Society. David like a lot of us has lost friends, relatives and family to this disease none closer to his heart than his father who a few months back had a relapse of his cancer and circumed to the disease.

This disease has weighed heavily on David over the last few years as it seemed cancer was becoming like a common cold in everyday life with people developing cancer left right and center and David felt it's time to up the ante and be more involved in helping to develop a cure. The Cancer institute's rely heavily on the public for donations as they are self funded with very little or no help from governments for this research, so they need all of the public's help they can get said David.

David would like to thank the customers so far that have been supporting lastsecondeals.com and making his dream come true in helping the Cancer Research Unit find that cure and make that historical break through hopefully in the near future.
