DirectRooms.com reveals that Cardiff will be holding a conference on adoption processes and the ways in which social workers and parents can work together for the best interests of children.

Contact and Identity in Adoption will focus on a number of themes to ensure all parties involved with helping children can learn from the event. Subjects coming under discussion will include how contact should be made with infants as children go through care proceedings. Experts can also be heard presenting findings on how children feel about their own identity and finding out about who they really are in respect to their birth parents and adoptive family.

Throughout the course experts will give their advice and this will come from leading doctors, lecturers and social workers in the field. Industry members can attend to hear about research into areas such as how children feel about their real parents and their new parents. The impact of a parent's actions is another area of discussion and several workshops are due to run to give attendees practical sessions on current topics.

Delegates will be looking for cheap Cardiff hotels near to the Wales Millennium Centre on 12th April 2011 when the event takes place and this could lead to a shortage of rooms in nearby hotels.

Lek Boonlert, marketing head at DirectRooms.com commented: "For people within the industry this is a critical conference to hear about the latest research and ways to be a better carer. As attendees descend on Cardiff, hotels will be in higher demand so people should look to book early."
