Ray Rew, has not always been an NCC Home Learning tutor, up until 2001 he worked in a variety of design, development and management roles in the electronic engineering industry, but after taking early retirement he had finally found his ideal career in tutoring.

Ray started working for NCC in 2001 as a part time, self-employed Distance Learning tutor, delivering a range of training courses for NCC and a number of local colleges.

Major parts of his previous job role included, managing and developing staff including training and development and occasionally being a shoulder to cry on when things didn't go as planned. These were all experiences and skills that he was able to put to good use in his new career.

He completed the NCC Distance Learning Tutor Certificate to broaden and formalise his knowledge in this extremely interesting and rewarding area .

The NCC Home Learning tutor states: "I had always been interested in the training and development of my staff and outside of work, on a voluntary basis, enjoyed working in a number of teaching type roles with children."

“My work as a distance learning and home learning tutor has afforded me the privilege of supporting over 1500 students to achieve their qualifications.”

Ray Rew has now written and edited a number of distance learning courses on a variety of subjects including Human Resources, Teaching Assistant Courses and Customer Service diplomas, for which he is also a home learning tutor.

The NCC Home Learning tutor is a happily married man with two married children and two grandsons. He is a dedicated tutor who wishes only the best for his learners and takes pride in watching them develop their own knowledge and skills.

NCC Home Learning aim to provide the option of distance learning and home learning for everyone with courses such as psychology courses online, they enable you to train around your busy life style making it easier to educate yourself or staff members.
