

Tarps Now® Announces New Storm Recovery Materials

St. Joseph, Michigan, United States, 2019-Sep-24 — /EPR Network/ — When natural disasters strike, homes are destroyed, jobs and lives are lost, and local economies are decimated. Even when limited storm or earthquake damage causes damage to roofing, windows, interior rooms and thresholds, ready access to heavy duty tarps can quickly provide coverage that enhances the ability to effect lasting repairs while preserving things that have not been destroyed.

To meet the ever-increasing number of natural disasters associated with climate change, leading U.S. based tarp materials supplier, Tarps Now® has substantially increased its supplies of Super Heavy Duty Tarps in anticipation of future hurricanes and other types of natural disasters that are becoming all too common in the Western Hemisphere. Prompt access to heavy duty tarps in disaster prone areas has helped to provide temporary shelter when homes were nearly destroyed, and when they were not, these same tarps were used to secure damaged roofing areas, walls and interior rooms as well. These are also often used to quickly set up tents that delivered immediate protection from the elements. In addition, debris netting tarps are often used to cover areas where inclement weather makes repairs difficult to execute.

Tarps Now® offers their heavy-duty tarp products for sale to the public, businesses, state, federal, military and other governmental agencies through the TarpsNow.com website, which also provides tarp material consulting services to such entities throughout the Western Hemisphere. In addition, the company offers custom tarp fabricating through streamlined technology processes which is engineered to meet the needs of government, business and the private sector in record times.
